

Lansburgh & Bro

Refreshing Sleep.

Is health-producing and health preserving, but you cannot sleep these cold nights unless you have warm bed covering. If you need Blankets, Comforts or spreads you might as well buy them of us—if for no other reason than to save money.

We give you a 75c 10-4 White Blanket for . . . 59c

We give you a $1.25 11-4 White Blanket, full large for a double bed, for . . . 93c

A $1.65 10-4 Gray Blanket, extra heavy, for . . . $1.35

A $1.75 11-4 White Blanket, full size for a double bed, in light blue, pink and red border, for . . . $1.40

A $2 11-4 Gray Blanket, full size for a double bed, extra heavy, for . . . $1.50

A $4 11-4 White Blanket, extra heavy, with red, blue and fancy borders, for . . . $3.00

A $6.50 11-4 All-wool Blanket, made expressly for us, with pink, blue, red and yellow borders, for . . . $5.00

Lansburgh & Bro.
420, 422, 424, 426 7th St.

THE WEATHER AND BUTTER
are alike. They cannot be depended upon. They vary and change constantly. No butter is of the same excellence continuously. Better that you pay 40c a pound for in one lot may be unfit to eat next time. Prices is no guarantee of quality. With ALDERNEY CREAMERY BUTTER all this worry is done away with. ALDERNEY CREAMERY BUTTER is of the same excellence at all times—i. e., the highest excellence. It is absolutely uniform and never varies. Same with the price—20c a pound every day in the year. No disappointments occur to shame you when the guests are assembled around your festive board. ALDERNEY CREAMERY BUTTER is invariably superior to butter, in that it is very delicate in bouquet; it retains that delicious sweetness to the end; does not get rancid, and it costs less. 20c a pound at the

Square Marble and Glass Stands
IN CENTER MARKET.
Wilkins & Company,
Manufacturers
Wholesale Distributing Agents.

S. Kann, Sons & Co.,
Eighth and Market Space.

MEN'S Imported Scotch Golf BICYCLE HOSE.
The identical quality and patterns as sold elsewhere at $1.50, to-morrow, 98c.

S. Kann, Sons & Co.,
8th and Market Space.

KIMBALL PIANOS
Have Few Equals—No Superiors.
In tone they possess a rich resonance, a perfect support to the voice. The well balanced keys respond to the lightest touch. Every part is constructed of thoroughly seasoned material. To sum up—a more perfect piano is impossible to produce.
METZGEROTT MUSIC CO.
All the Latest Sheet Music.
1110 F. St. N. W.

NEW HOME OF LEGATION

Spanish Minister Will Move Into the Tiffany Mansion.

Solicitor General and Mrs. Conrad have secured a house—Senator Dolph's Married Daughter Here.

Senator Dupuy de Lamoignon, the Spanish minister, has taken the Tiffany residence, No. 1705 Connecticut avenue, just beyond Dupont Circle, and the Spanish legation will take possession of it next week. This handsome home is in the center of the diplomatic set, the neighborhood being most affected by foreigners at the capital.

Solicitor General and Mrs. Holmes Conrad have taken a handsome home in 18th street north east, and will spend the season in Washington. This will be the first season spent here by the Holmes Conrads, they having heretofore visited the city a week or a few days at a time, returning to their home at Winchester, Va.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Nixon will spend the winter at the Concord. They have recently made an enjoyable trip through Canada, and Mr. Nixon is now in Washington representing the firm of which his father-in-law, Senator Dixon, is the senior member. His mission here at present is to attend to some important matters which will shortly come before the Supreme Court. Mrs. Nixon, who was not very well when she left Washington a couple of years ago, is completely restored to health.

Mr. and Mrs. William K. Brown are back for the winter in the house on K street.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Gillette will return on Wednesday from their country place at Wallingford, Pa., and will open their home, No. 1614 Twentieth street northwest.

Lieutenant Commander McGowan, U. S. N., and Mrs. McGowan have returned to their home, No. 2125 Hillier place. Miss McGowan spent the summer with friends at Irvington-on-the-Hudson.

The wedding of Miss Madeline Nelson, daughter of Henry Nelson, editor of Harper's Weekly, to Lieut. James W. Williams, of the First Artillery, now stationed at David's Island, will take place at the home of the bride, New Rochelle, N. Y., on Thursday evening, October 24. Lieut. W. B. Laders, of the Engineer Corps, will act as best man, and the maid of honor will be Miss Hilgarte Hawthorne, daughter of Julian Hawthorne, the author.

Miss Cordelia Strawbridge, of Macon, Ga., is the guest of Miss Ethel Lynch, of Capitol Hill.

Miss Mary Daily, of Indiana avenue, is home from her pleasant visit to the North.

Miss Jane Girard, of Chestnut Hill, Pa., was a recent guest of Miss Daisy Simms, of Seventh street northeast.

There was a meeting at Carroll Hall at 7:30 o'clock last night of the ladies and gentlemen interested in the Graysville fair. After an enthusiastic discussion, it was decided to settle upon no definite arrangements until Monday next, when there will be another meeting at the same hour and place, at which it is expected the number of tables will be decided upon and the date of the fair's opening fixed.

There was a meeting of the active members of the Story tellers' Club last night at the home of Miss Grace Greene, of New Jersey avenue, to devise a program for their next sociable, which will take place on All Hallows' Eve. It was decided to observe the time-honored trial of fortune by apples bobbing in water, roasting in ashes and dangling high on a string. But wish balls, salted eggs and witch candles are to be discarded, and the club will sit in the dark and tell All Hallows' Eve legends instead.

A prize will be awarded the member who produces the most satisfactory amount of terror, after which there will be a grand supper and songs.

The members present were Misses Phyllis Williams, Marie Williams, Gustie Brennan, Madge Garrett, Stella Lucas, Minnie Paul and Messrs. John Clarke, Hal Stewart, Fred Bull, Walter Dennis, Samuel Ferguson and John and Charlie Beason.

Miss Beulah Adams, of H street northeast, will give a dancing party on Thursday evening, in honor of her cousin, Miss Etta Adams, of Camden, N. J.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Schneider, of Seventh street northeast, will celebrate their wedding on Monday evening next, when they will be at home to their friends.

Miss Tilly McKee has returned from Philadelphia after an extended visit to her classmate, Miss Edith McFall, of Fairmount avenue.

Mr. George McKee Parks and his daughter, Miss Elizabeth, are visiting friends in Richmond prior to an extended trip throughout the South that will include the Atlanta Exposition.

The friends of Mrs. Sarah P. Burke will be pleased to learn that she is convalescing from her recent illness.

Mr. Charles K. Windham is home from a prolonged visit to New York.

Mrs. Ruth Benson, of East Capitol street, who has been visiting relatives in Madison, Wis., is expected home the latter part of this week.

Mr. Ralph C. Jones is spending October with friends in Southern Maryland.

Miss Annie McDonough is visiting her cousin, Miss Grace Evans, of Baltimore, Md.

Miss Estelle Evans and her brother, Mr. Walter Evans, have returned from their pleasant and extended sojourn among the New Hampshire hills.

Mr. and Mrs. David B. Elliott, of Sixteenth street, have returned from Atlantic City, bringing with them the little son of Mr. Frank Weller, who will remain their guests until after the Thanksgiving holidays.

EGGS THAT COST A FORTUNE.

It is not generally known that among the birds of the day the collecting of birds' eggs is one that interests the cultured and wealthy, and one that may be very expensively indulged in, while it affords a mild recreation to thousands of individuals of moderate means.

The scientific collection of birds' eggs has, in fact, become a fascinating avocation.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Information as to the nesting habits of the California condor has been exceedingly limited, and until 1889, when an egg was taken for H. R. Taylor, editor of the Zoologist, no egg had been taken since the '60's. The taking of this egg showed the nesting time to be early in May, and that but one egg is laid. The collector secured the great egg after a hazardous climb down a rope, which he had fastened to a bush on the bluff above.

The condor's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Ladies' and Children's Underwear

—right weights—right styles—right qualities—right prices—right here.

CHILDREN'S white and natural merino underwear—vests, pants and drawers—very good quality—size 12 to 14— . . . 25c

CHILDREN'S Union Suits—jersey ribbed—ONEIRA make—seamless and glove-fitting—ages 3 to 14 years. . . . 79c

LADIES' white Australian wool vests—jersey ribbed—pants and drawers—all sizes . . . 68c

LADIES' glove-fitting Union Suits—seamless—silk tapes—pearl buttons—fine quality . . . 97c

LADIES' jersey ribbed vests—seamless—French hand to draw—size 12 to 14 . . . 38c

Bon Marche,

314 and 316 7th St.

kleptomaniac thought it no sin to transfer the treasure to his own collection, where he is holding it for a price.

Information as to the nesting habits of the California condor has been exceedingly limited, and until 1889, when an egg was taken for H. R. Taylor, editor of the Zoologist, no egg had been taken since the '60's. The taking of this egg showed the nesting time to be early in May, and that but one egg is laid. The collector secured the great egg after a hazardous climb down a rope, which he had fastened to a bush on the bluff above.

The condor's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, for many years curator of birds in the California Academy of Sciences, showed that a collector may devote for science on one of his expeditions to Lower California, Guadalupe Islands, lying about 150 miles off the coast of Lower California, was almost an unknown territory to bird students, and he determined to visit it. The island is uninhabited and vessels do not pass near it, so it was some time before he managed to secure passage on a freight schooner.

The collector's egg was found lying in a hollow in the cave, with a few feathers for a nest. The collector had been frightened off by the discharge of the collector's gun, and fortunately did not return while he was in the cave. He had not come prepared to carry any eggs, but taking off his shirt he wrapped the egg in it and lowered it to the bottom of the cliff, himself following in safety.

At the Bon Marche

GRAND MILITARY PETE

Lady Friends of the Corcoran Cadet Corps Appoint Committees.

The Ladies' Armory Will Present the Appearance of a Chinese Village During the Fair.

The lady friends of the Corcoran Cadets who are to assist in the management of the grand military fête to be given at National Rifle's Armory from October 28 to November 9 held a meeting last night at the armory of the cadets. The main object of the meeting was to appoint the committees that will have charge of the several booths. The committees were appointed as follows:

Fancy Booth, No. 1—Miss Amy Lee, in charge; Miss Rita Schroeder, Miss Sue Schreder, Miss Annie Mandell, Miss Margaret Mandell, Miss Gertrude Aldridge, Miss C. Graham, Miss R. Optata, Miss L. Backley, Miss M. Ball, Miss N. Boyle, Miss E. Carrier, Miss F. E. Carrier, Miss Linn Carrier, Miss